BASKING RIDGE, N.J., Nov. 28, 2022 /PRNewswire/ -- Physician's Weekly, a trusted source of medical news, perspectives, and education at the point of care, and the National Alliance for Hispanic Health (NAHH), the nation's leading, science-based Hispanic health advocacy group, partnered up with the common goal of advancing health equity to ensure everyone has the opportunity to receive the best care.

As part of the company's commitment to diversity and inclusion, starting in December, Physician's Weekly will include content from the NAHH and its Healthy America's Foundation alongside their own trusted editorial on Physician's Weekly posters, together bringing the powerful message that science, culture, and community are critical to delivering care, especially at the point of care.

"Diversity and inclusion enhance our ability to understand and best serve people across all cultures and backgrounds," said Greg Jackson, CEO, Physician's Weekly. "We are dedicated to helping physicians provide optimal medical care and to helping patients make better, more informed decisions the way we know best—by strengthening conversations about health with excellent medical content and knowledge. We are proud to partner with the NAHH in this shared mission."

"We are committed to supporting the many health care professionals and individuals who everyday work to provide quality care regardless of a person's race, ethnicity, or gender. Working with Physician's Weekly is a meaningful way to provide cutting edge information when and where healthcare decisions are made," said Dr. Jane Delgado, President, and CEO of the National Alliance for Hispanic Health.
